Publisher's Notes

By Timothy J. Pade • pade@coloradogolf.com

We are excited to distribute this issue of Colorado Golf Magazine throughout the Rocky Mountain region! This is an exceptional time in Colorado with historic ramifications, and there's no better person to grace our cover than Colorado's own John Elway, president of Cherry Hills Country Club, Vice President of operations and General Manager of the Denver Broncos. Elway was instrumental in helping to bring the illustrious BMW Championship to his home course in Colorado, and that in turn will bring the top golfers in the world to the Mile High City.

We can expect the top 70 players in the world as finalists in the PGA Tour's FedEx Cup playoffs. Those expected to attend include Tiger Woods, Rory McIlroy, Zach Johnson and Martin Kaymer, among others. They will test the renovated Cherry Hills Country Club course and vie for the $1.44 million payout.

Cherry Hills Country Club has hosted 11 major tournaments including seven USGA championships. The U.S. Open has been held at Cherry Hills three times and the PGA Championship twice. Two U.S. Amateur tournaments have been contested there, as have one each of the U.S. Senior Open, U.S. Senior Amateur, U.S. Women's Open and U.S. Mid-Amateur tournaments.

Cherry Hills Country Club has held more historically significant golf tournaments than any other facility in Colorado, not the least of which was Arnold Palmer's historic come-from-behind win at the 1960 U.S. Open, which launched what came to be known as Arnie's Army. A then unknown Phil Mickelson won the U.S. Amateur in 1990, and Jack Nicklaus won the U.S. Senior Open in 1993, beating runner-up Tom Weiskopf by one stroke. And, of course, few will forget Birdie Kim's spectacular hole out from the greenside bunker on No. 18 to win the 2005 U.S. Women's Open by two shots.

We will proudly welcome the PGA's top 70 players to Colorado in September, and expect the game to enter a fever pitch as the BMW Championship is played along Cherry Hills' spectacular fairways. To read more about the tournament, please turn to pg. 12.

This issue will also showcase our gorgeous Rocky Mountain courses in both Vail and Aspen, with features on pages 22 and 26. Our lifestyles section includes travel, luxury automobiles, jewelry, fashion, instruction and more!

Finally, our 26th season would not be complete without a huge thanks to those of you who continue to support Colorado Golf Magazine.

Colorado Welcomes the BMW Championship

One of the Tour's most prestigious events will be played at Cherry Hills Country Club

2013 BMW Champion Zach Johnson

It's an indelible part of the FedExCup fall schedule, a tournament that brings it all together: great golf; a terrific fan experience; a prestigious title sponsor; and support of a worthy cause, the Evans Scholarship Foundation. No wonder the BMW Championship was named the PGA Tour's Tournament of the Year in 2013—for the second year in a row.

"On behalf of the PGA Tour, I am pleased to congratulate the BMW Championship for being named the best among its peers," says Andy Pazder, PGA Tour executive vice president and chief of operations. "The tournament committee should be proud of the special recognition the event has earned for its efforts."

Conducted by the Western Golf Association (WGA), which was founded in 1899 to promote golf in the western half of the United States, the tournament is premium from start to finish. "Given the caliber of the more than 40 outstanding events on the Tour each season, it is incredibly humbling to receive this honor for for many of golf's finest championships, and we are thrilled to have the top 70 players in the world here for the 2014 event. Our effort is focused on staging a top-quality event for golf fans, players, volunteers, our sponsor and the many corporate hospitality participants."

John Elway, club president, agrees. "Cherry Hills welcomes the opportunity to once again showcase our course and to put Denver at the center of the golf world in September 2014," he says. "An important component of our club's rich heritage has been to offer a worthy venue for the world's finest professional and amateur golfers. Hosting the 2014 BMW Championship reaffirms our commitment to opening our course for competition at the highest level."

PGA Tour pro Zach Johnson, who won last year at Conway Farms Golf Club outside of Chicago, is the tournament's defending champion. In 2012, the tournament was hosted by Crooked Stick the second year in a row and the third time since 2008," says Vince Pellegrino, the association's senior vice president, tournaments. "The WGA shares this award with our title sponsor, BMW of North America, with whom we've had a strong partnership for the last seven years."

Cherry Hills Country Club Hole No. 17

This year, the tournament comes to the Denver metro area, Sept. 1-7, at Cherry Hills Country Club. Colorado energy entrepreneur and philanthropist George Solich is the general chair for the 2014 event and a stellar example of how successful the scholarship program is.

"Serving as general chairman of the 2014 BMW Championship is an honor and a privilege, and as a former caddie and Evans Scholars recipient, I could not be more pleased to see the BMW Championship coming to Cherry Hills," Solich says. "Since its founding in 1922, Cherry Hills has served as a time-tested venue

Golf Club in Carmel, Indiana, and won by Rory McIlroy. And in 2008, the first year it was honored as Tournament of the Year, the BMW was played at Bellerive Country Club in St. Louis.

Fans expect a high level of golf and they won't be disappointed. As the FedExCup winds down in the fall, top-ranked players will be on hand to battle for the final points. As of this writing, the top 10 in the rankings are Jimmy Walker, Bubba Watson, Matt Kuchar, Dustin Johnson, Jordan Spieth, Chris Kirk, Patrick Reed, Harris English, Brendon Todd and Kevin Na. But keep an eye on the list. Changes in ranking are part of what makes the final tournaments so exciting.

But it's not just about golf. The BMW Championship is also about a very special charity. The Evans Scholars Foundation administers funds for a program that sends deserving caddies to college—with full tuition and housing paid. The Western Golf contributions caddies make to the game of golf, it's also about the important character they exhibit—on and off the course.

The WGA puts it this way: "We're proud of the history of golf as a walking game. We embrace the core values that underscore a caddie's presence on the course: hard work, cooperation, persistence and respect. It's part of our golf heritage. That's why we assist in finding potential caddies and help clubs in starting new caddie programs and improving existing ones. Above all, we promote the Evans Scholars Program."

Those core values are also recognizable in the way the program plays out long after graduation. Like George Solich, many alumni, Association has been helping in this endeavor since 1930 when the first two caddie recipients attended Northwestern University. The tournament has raised more than $17 million for the foundation since 2007 and helped graduate nearly 10,000 caddie scholars from 19 universities. Today, there are more than 800 deserving young men and women attending college thanks to this program. And while it's a program that recognizes the important even those who graduated decades ago, volunteer at the BMW Championship. Some serve as caddies in the pro-am events, donating their tips to the Evans Scholars Foundation, some are greeters at the tournament entry gates, ready to provide information. Alumni are a huge part of the base from which contributions are made to support the scholarship program.

Title sponsor BMW of North America does it part, too. Last year BMW even awarded a four-year scholarship to the foundation when Hunter Mahan recorded a hole-in-one on the 17th hole during the third round, a five-iron shot that also netted the player a BMW i3, the company's new electric car.

The Western Golf Association and Cherry Hills Country Club have long and storied histories, and there's every reason to believe that the 2014 BMW Championship will add to the luster.

"Cherry Hills has served as a worthy venue for many of golf's finest championships and has been a long supporter of the Evans Scholars Foundation, the sole beneficiary of the BMW Championship," Pellegrino says. "We're looking forward to bringing the world's top players to Colorado for the 2014 PGA Tour playoffs."

Tickets will be limited. For more on the tournament go to bmwchampionshipusa.com; for more on the WGA and Evans Scholars Foundation, log onto wgaesf.org

The BMW Championship

is coming to Colorado, in large part thanks to John Elway

Back in 2011, the powers that be behind the BMW Championship, part of the PGA Tour's FedEx Cup playoffs, announced that the 2014 edition of the tournament would be played at Cherry Hills Country Club in suburban Denver.

One of the men who helped make that happen was John Elway, known to many Coloradoans as general manager and executive vice president of football operations for the Denver Broncos, the team he led to two Super Bowl championships as quarterback in 1998 and 1999. A scratch golfer, Elway is also president of Cherry Hills Country Club's board of directors, and in that role he was instrumental in bringing the BMW Championship to Denver.

Elway has been a member of the club since 1989, and he's proud to showcase his home golf course on the PGA Tour, which hasn't been in Colorado since the International was played for the last time at Castle Pines in 2006.

"I'm honored to announce that Cherry Hills Country Club will host the 2014 BMW Championship," Elway said in 2011. "I'm thrilled that we are bringing a premier PGA Tour event back to Colorado."

About the club's course, which is shorter by today's standards than most on the Tour, Elway said, "It's an old-style, traditional golf course that you never get tired of playing. We're thrilled to have the event here. The players are so good these days, but we are confident the course will hang in there and compete against these guys."

During the announcement, Elway gave recognition to George Solich, Colorado energy entrepreneur, philanthropist and general chair for the 2014 tournament, as the power behind the move to bring the tournament to Cherry Hills. Having the event in Colorado is special to Solich, who is a former caddie and a recipient of an Evans Scholarship, the primary beneficiary of the BMW Championship.

"George Solich really led this charge for Cherry Hills Country Club over the last 12 to 18 months," Elway said. "He has done a tremendous job of making this happen for this great club that we are a part of. Without George, this would not have happened."

Elway also gave credit to Coloradoans for being an excellent fan base and he should know. "Colorado has so many great sports fans. It's always been a great place to come up here and play whatever you play."

The Tour players will no doubt find that to be true when they arrive in September for the tournament that will run Sept. 1-7. Sponsored by BMW of North America and conducted by the Western Golf Association, the tournament has $8 million in prize money with $1.44 million going to the winner.

While the contract that brings the 2014 BMW Championship to the Mile High City is just for one year, no one, least of all Elway, is discounting the possibility that a regular Colorado stop on the PGA Tour calendar might become a tradition.

"We're thrilled with the opportunity to host the BMW in 2014," Elway said. "We'll see what comes after that."

Meanwhile, Elway and some of his sport-playing friends got together to promote BMW ticket sales in an amusing YouTube commercial. In it, Elway, Broncos quarterback Peyton Manning, former Bronco John Lynch and Chauncey Billups, who attended the University of Colorado and played multiple seasons for the Denver Nuggets, gather to attend Husher School, where they try to learn how to keep golf fans quiet during tournament play. If you haven't seen it, check it out at <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=iEeVNzcrYZU>.

Fun and games aside, come September, it's almost certain that Colorado golf fans will prove Elway right by showing up in record numbers to support what they hope will be the first of many PGA Tour contests in the Centennial State.

The Evans Scholars Program

Caddies receive full tuition and housing costs at 19 major U.S. universities

Chick Evans Jr. was not just one of the great players of early golf. He was a visionary and philanthropist, and his legacy has no doubt had an impact far beyond what even he could have imagined when he first had the idea to send deserving caddies to college.

Although he started the fund on his own, Evans soon saw that he needed help to implement his program, which became known as the Evans Scholars Program. In 1929, he turned to the Western Golf Association (WGA), an association formed by a group of men determined to promote golf in the western region of the United States. The association was fittingly headquartered in Golf, Illinois, and was soon hosting amateur and open championships to showcase the exceptional talent of golfers who made their home in the west.

In 1930, the WGA awarded its first two scholarships to caddies Harold Fink and Jim McGinnis, both of whom went on to attend Northwestern University, the same school Chick Evans had attended. Until World War II, all Evans scholars attended Northwestern, but that would change.

Tuition at Northwestern in 1930 was $150 per year, far less than the investment Evans had initially made, which meant the WGA had to find other worthy recipients. The group established criteria for selecting applicants: scholarship, fellowship and leadership. Today, those elements remain at the heart of the program, which is now administered through the Evans Scholars Foundation and funded through contributions from more than 100,000 golfers across the country, Evans alumni and proceeds from the WGA's venerable BMW Championship, the third of four playoff events in the PGA Tour's FedExCup competition.

In 1940, the program developed another element that would in many ways define it going forward, even as it celebrated what Evans had long felt about the importance of caddies.

"The caddie is the lifeblood of the game of golf—a great companion, a friendly conversationalist and a smiling face," he had said. "This is what the game of golf is truly all about."

In that spirit, it was at Northwestern University that the first Evans Scholars Chapter House was established, where the caddies would live and study together cooperatively as a group. There are now 14 houses at 14 different universities: Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Marquette, Miami, Michigan, Michigan State, Minnesota, Missouri, Northern Illinois, Northwestern, Ohio State, Purdue and Wisconsin.

"We believe that the sense of empowerment fostered through Chapter living is largely responsible for the tremendous success of our 14 Evans Scholarship Chapters," say the Foundation leaders, and the success of the houses supports their belief. On each of the 14 campuses, the Evans Scholars Houses have earned a reputation for high scholastic achievement and community service, and for fostering strong leadership and communication skills among the residents.

Since 1930, more than 9,800 men and women have graduated as Evans Scholars, benefitting enormously from the generous full tuition and housing paid by the program. There are currently 840 students attending 19 universities, most of them at the 14 schools with Evans Scholarship Houses. However, 50 are at five additional universities—Notre Dame, Oregon, Oregon State, Penn State and Washington—which have Evans scholars though not a chapter house. Tuition and housing paid out by the Foundation each year exceeds $12 million. With college costs skyrocketing, that number will only go up—as will the need for the scholarships.

Plans are in place to increase the number of Evans Scholars in school and to expand the organization's geographic footprint to take in the United States from coast to coast, meaning that funding has never been more critical.

Colorado golfers and fans have a chance this year to rise to the occasion and help. In September, the BMW Championship will be played at Cherry Hills Country Club in Denver for the first time, and the Evans Scholars Foundation will be the sole beneficiary.

"Cherry Hills Country Club, with its world-class golf course and historical significance, will provide a great venue for the 2014 BMW Championship," says Andy Pazder, PGA Tour chief of operations. "We appreciate the support the championship has received at its recent venues and believe that Denver will offer optimal benefits for spectators, our players and, ultimately, the Evans Scholars Foundation."

For info on the BMW Championship at Cherry Hills Country Club Sept. 1-7, visit bmwchampionshipusa.com. Learn more about the scholarships at wgaesf.org

Scholarship Requirements

To qualify, caddies must be nominated by their club and meet four requirements:

Strong caddie record: Applicants must have caddied, successfully and regularly, for a minimum of two years and are also expected to caddie and/or work at their sponsoring club during the summer when they apply for the scholarship.

Excellent academics: Applicants must have completed their junior year of high school with above a B average in college preparatory courses and are required to take the ACT.

Demonstrated financial need: Applicants must clearly establish their need for financial assistance.

Outstanding character: Applicants must be outstanding in character, integrity and leadership.

Applicants are evaluated and compete on the above criteria for the limited number of Chick Evans Caddie Scholarships awarded annually. The Scholarship Committee interviews finalists and the final selection rests with the Committee.

Can Watson Win Another Ryder Cup?

He did it as captain in 1993 at The Belfry in England, and the U.S. team would dearly like a repeat

Is 2014 the U.S. team's year to win back the Ryder Cup? It's a feat that has not been accomplished since 2008 at Valhalla Golf Club in Kentucky, and since 1993 in Europe. Revered Gleneagles Golf Club hosts the 2014 Matches, but not on its fabled James Braid courses. Instead, this year's Cup will be contested on Jack Nicklaus' signature parkland layout for big hitters, the PGA Centenary Course, originally named the Monarch's Course.

Many Europeans are dismayed that the Matches aren't on one of Scotland's famed links.

Initial Matches were played at Gleneagles in 1921, with Britain/Ireland winning 9-3. Seed merchant Samuel Ryder, an ardent spectator and golfer, launched the Ryder Cup at tea in 1926. In 1979, with U.S. teams dominating the Matches, Jack Nicklaus suggested changing the format and team selection to include Europe. Since then, Europe has won nine Matches, America four, and there has been one tie.

European Captain Ireland's Paul McGinley

Gleneagles Golf Club

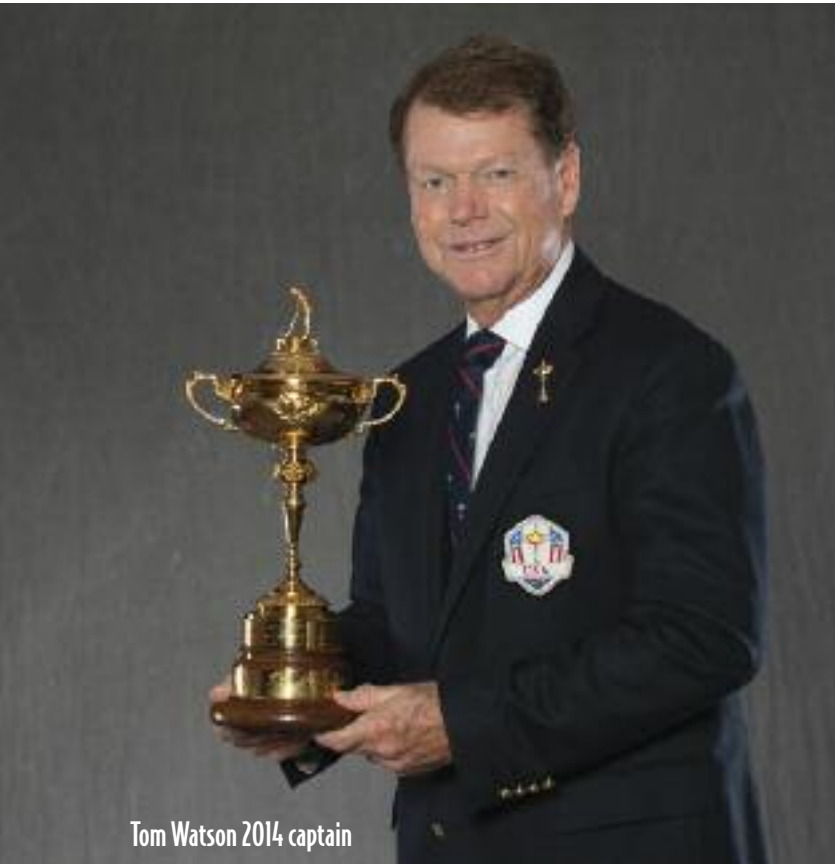

On paper, the United States was predicted glory on Arnold Palmer's spectacular design at Ireland's K Club in 2006, and again in 2010 at rain-drenched Celtic Manor in Wales. In 2012, the European team prevailed yet again, this time at Medinah Country Club in Illinois with a sensational Sunday singles win that has come to be known as the "Miracle of Medinah."

Needing a turnaround from these losses, the U.S. revised its strategy and named Tom Watson 2014 captain. Loved by the Scots as a native son, Watson brings a depth of unrivaled experience and a focus from a "winning" generation, and he has no fear of doing things his way to win, as he did in 1993 as captain—the U.S. team's last victory on European soil. Watson has chosen Andy North and Raymond Floyd as vice captains.

Ireland's Paul McGinley, Europe's captain, isn't a household name, but he has been a perennial vice captain in the Ryder Cup Matches and a victorious captain for many Seve Trophy teams. McGinley also made the winning putt against Jim Furyk at The Belfry in the 2002 Matches. He has chosen Scotland's victorious 2002 Ryder Cup captain, Sam Torrance, and Ireland's Des Smyth as his initial vice captains.

Both captains have three picks, which will be critical considering the multitude of new, young talent available for the 12-man teams. Some Ryder Cup veteran players could be lacking points.

Graeme McDowell, whose triumph over Hunter Mahan in 2010 secured the Cup, believes competition will be fierce. "There are going to be two or three guys who miss, quality players," he says. "McGinley's wild cards will be very hotly contested. [It will be] a tough team to get on, and for America, too."

Tom Watson 2014 captain

Zach Johnson agrees. "All are grinding. They want to make the team."

Is Tiger a lock? Not like before. Potential newbies for the U.S. team are Jimmy Walker, Jordan Spieth, Patrick Reed and Harris English.

Europe's Victor Dubuisson, Henrik Stenson, Jamie Donaldson and Thomas Bjorn appear in. It's hoped that Scot Stephen Gallacher will qualify so McGinley doesn't need to use a pick.

Retouched by Nicklaus for the Matches, the par-72 PGA Centenary Course now stretches 7,243 yards. The 18th hole received the most changes in preparation for the Matches. "It's not a very difficult hole. It's exciting. I'm very proud of it," Nicklaus says.

Host Europe controls course set-up, which is always critical, but will be even more so if it's a "wet" Gleneagles. The European Tour's Johnny Walker Championships have also been contested here annually, thus advantage Europe. But, it's a big-hitters course, and that gives the U.S. team more advantage.

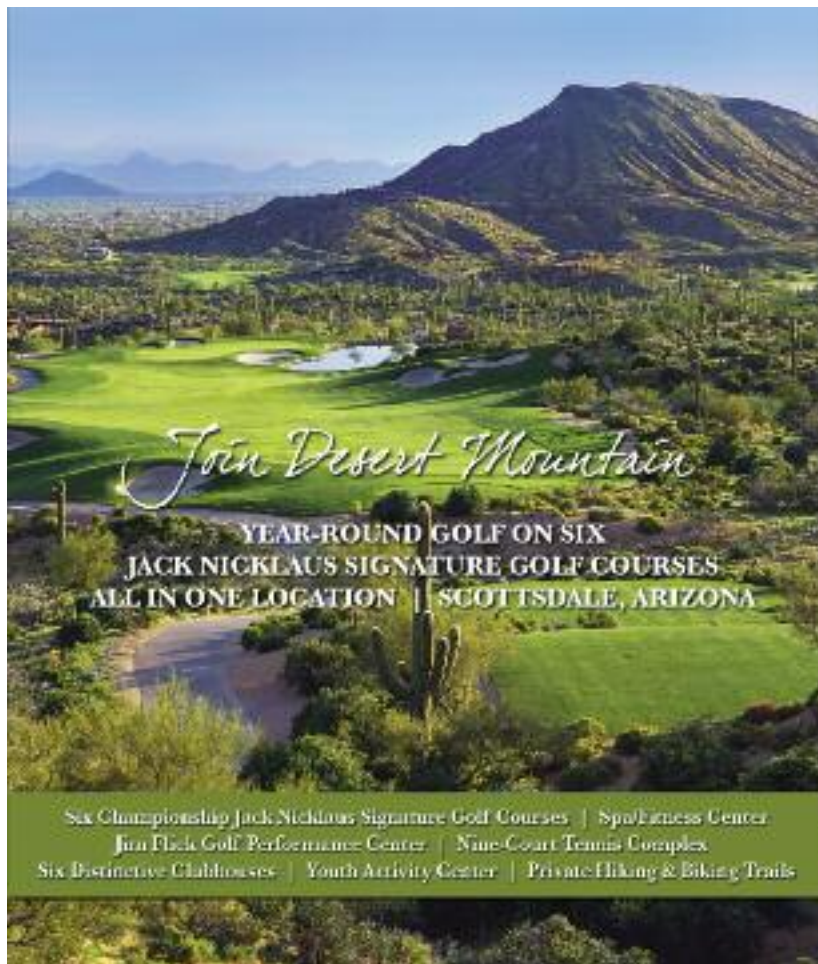

"Gleneagles is a very unique course, creating a challenge in itself," Arnold Palmer notes. "I think America's success will depend on how seriously they approach the Matches, if their mental toughness equals or betters [that of] the Europeans."

NBC/Golf Channel Ryder Cup commentator, England's Tom Abbott, says, "The stretch from the par-4 14th on is testing and will be tough. The par-5 16th is risk/reward and bombers can go for it in two. The 18th is a good finish but isn't that tough."

As for Captain Watson, he's old school. He only wants guys on his team "with heart and guts."

packages that have included Masters tickets and golf with pros. The next day, anyone can attend a free teaching clinic before the tournament at Aspen Golf Club, where the Aspen Junior Golf Foundation maintains a clubhouse for its participants.

Organizers ensure that regardless of family income, any child can take part in junior golf programs. Tournament director Charlie Weaver says, "Our goals for kids are to learn the rules of golf, and be ladies and gentlemen on the course—and in life. We emphasize honesty, integrity and togetherness." Money raised covers projects such as recent, extensive clubhouse improvements. Weaver notes the time, effort and funds donated by volunteers and supporters, plus AJG's positive relationships with City officials and vendors. (Information at AspenJuniorGolf.com)

Vince Gill & Amy Grant Gala and Golf Classic: July 28-29

Country-music superstars Gill and Grant celebrate 10 years hosting their annual fundraiser to benefit Challenge Aspen, a nonprofit that offers year-round recreational, educational and cultural experiences for anyone with a cognitive or physical disability. Monday's cocktail reception at the St. Regis Aspen Resort features an always-anticipated concert by Gill and Grant. Tuesday includes golf at Snowmass Club followed by an awards party.

Challenge Aspen's development director, Jay Israel, says its participants are part of the gala, including a performance by youth from the organization's music-and-dance camp. Golf foursomes are joined by celebrities as well as those with varying degrees of injury, including single-, double- and triple amputees. "Our supporters see the recipients of what we do every day—and our program members play to help us help them." He continues, "We're a fully funded nonprofit like any other. This fundraiser is 40 percent of our annual budget." (Details at ChallengeAspen.org)

Owners have utilized $12 million over the past four years to fulfill their golf goal to be "Augusta National at 8,000 feet," says owner representative Scott Erwin. Tom Fazio redesigned greens and bunkers to USGA standards, tees were laser-leveled, the irrigation system was replaced and fairways are now bluegrass. Augusta National Club's caddy master and half his staff work during Colorado's golf season at Maroon Creek's stellar venue. "There's not one blind shot on the course. Tom Lehman led a just-completed course redesign to make this former “most difficult course in the state” appeal to all levels of play. Managing partner Jim Light says, “Tom’s design philosophy is that the hole should be able to tell you how to play it. We’ve touched all 18 in some way—from eliminating bunkers to simple grassline work to major fairway contouring.” Superintendent Eric Foerster is dedicated to environmentally sensitive practices while growing in a 10,000-square-foot practice green, unique as a 9-hole putting course. Golf in
Vail Valley

By Todd Hartley

Folks come from around the world to ski these famous slopes and back bowls, but summer in Vail offers amazing multiple championship golf courses

When you think of Vail and Beaver Creek, obviously the first thing that comes to mind is skiing. You think of the mountains and snow and wintertime activities. It's only natural.

Vail and summer, on the other hand, might go together in your mind like bobsleds and Miami. But if you're a golfer and you think there's nothing for you in Vail in the summer, you're overlooking a goldmine of excellent courses, most of which you can play without having to join a club or take out a second mortgage.

Start in Vail, home to the Vail Golf Club, a locals' favorite since its opening in

The bikes come equipped with saddlebags on each side of the rear tire to hold clubs and gear, and while it's easiest to ride them on the paved cart paths, their smooth tires allow golfers to pedal across fairways without damaging the turf. Book an early tee time if you want to ride one, though. The four golf bikes, a hit with eco-warriors and fitness fans alike, usually get taken first thing in the morning.

Around the corner from Vail, the Eagle Vail Golf Club offers an affordable alternative for families with the Willow Creek Par 3 course. Perfect for kids, beginners and experts looking to hone their short games, the course's longest hole measures just 120 yards.

The regular-length Eagle Vail course, a Devlin/Von Hagge design, is tucked up against the hills along the Eagle River, giving it plenty of changes in elevation and two long river crossings that will test any golfer's nerves.

The upscale Sonnenalp Golf Club, in the nearby town of Edwards, offers membership packages and discounts to guests of Vail's Sonnenalp Hotel, but anyone is welcome to book a tee time. The Jay Morrish/Bob Cupp design nicely incorporates the rolling terrain and features great views across the valley toward Beaver Creek.

Eagle Vail Golf Club

1962. Laid out along the valley floor, with Gore Creek a factor on numerous holes, the course, which is open to everyone, provides a suitable challenge for low handicappers. But with five sets of tees, it's equally playable for less-accomplished golfers, too. The wide fairways and deceptive greens are well kept, and the views looking toward the craggy peaks of the Gore Range are spectacular.

This summer, Vail unveils a new 18th hole, a par-5 that provides a fitting coda to a fine layout. Also new this year is the Golf Bike program, the first of its kind in Colorado. Instead of taking a cart or walking, golfers at Vail now have the option of pedaling their way around the links on one of the course's four specialized Golf Bikes designed by Florida's Higher Ground Golf Co.

Sonnenalp Golf Club

Eagle Ranch Golf Club

The Club at Cordillera

A few minutes down the highway, in the town of Eagle, Eagle Ranch Golf Club is another affordable public option. The Arnold Palmer signature design winds across rolling terrain with a nice mix of hilly and open, links-style holes.

Farthest from Vail but easiest on the wallet and well worth the drive, the public Gypsum Creek Golf Club boasts a challenging Pete Dye layout and is another interesting possibility for families. The club's swimming pool is open to the public as well, meaning non-golfers can splash around for a few hours while their golfing counterparts hit the links.

In addition to its fully public courses, the Vail Valley also has a handful of top-flight tracks reserved specifically for resort guests, meaning they can be played by anyone, as long as that anyone spends the night in the right place.

Most notable among the valley's resort courses is Red Sky Ranch & Golf Club in Wolcott. The resort's two distinct 18-hole layouts, designed by Greg Norman and Tom Fazio, are consistently ranked among the top courses in Colorado. They can only be played by club members and anyone staying at the club's sizable list of lodging partners in Vail, Avon and Beaver Creek.

Closer to Vail and perched on a hilltop near the town of Edwards, The Club at Cordillera boasts three excellent 18-hole layouts open to members and visitors staying at local resorts and lodging partners. The Hale Irwin-designed Mountain Course rolls across a former working ranch near the top of the hills. Higher still, the Summit Course, a Jack Nicklaus design, will take your breath away, literally, with spectacular views and an elevation of 9,200 feet.

By contrast, Cordillera's Tom Fazio-designed Valley Course is nestled near the floor of the Eagle River Valley, giving it a longer season and warmer temperatures than its higher-altitude brethren.

Unlike Red Sky, Cordillera offers one fully public option: the innovative Short Course at Cordillera, a nine-hole par-3 layout designed by renowned short-game guru Dave Pelz. With a par of 27 and four different sets of tees, the Short Course is a great place to hone your irons or teach the game to your kids.

Running the length of the valley at the foot of its namesake ski resort, the Beaver Creek Golf Club, a scenic Robert Trent Jones, Jr. design, is open to members and guests staying at properties in Beaver Creek, Bachelor Gulch and Arrowhead.

Lastly, if you can figure out a way to get yourself a tee time, the Vail Valley also has some premier private courses. The Jack Nicklaus-designed Country Club of the Rockies, in Edwards, is often regarded as one of Colorado's top-10 courses. Eagle Springs Golf Club, a Jay Morrish/Tom Weiskopf design in Wolcott, is emphatically private, with no real estate development and a membership of just 300. Adam's Mountain Country Club, near Eagle, features a fine Tom Weiskopf-designed course amid a quiet gated community.

Rollingstone Ranch

The story goes: when Bill Coore made his first site visit to what is now a private golf course on the eastern slope of the Tahoe basin, he began to lose interest in taking on the project the higher and higher he was chauffeured into the mountains.

The good news for Coore, and the future members of the project he eventually took on and completed, is the results of the effort are spectacular. What Coore discovered on arrival was land that, despite being in and surrounded by mountains, had areas level enough to build a real golf course, free of tee-to-green trickery, with a premium on local knowledge on and around the greens. These principles were executed despite the apparent obstacles to traditional course design.

The circumstances Robert Trent Jones II encountered at Rollingstone Ranch are similar. Despite the Rocky Mountain location at the Sheraton Steamboat Resort, Jones rolled out a golf course that looks as though it's been there for 10,000 years. It was golf course land waiting to be discovered, as though the ancient lava flows streamed down in a certain way, just for future fairways, and compressing strata hardened just so, allowing Jones II to take advantage of elevation changes and gentle slopes in 1974.

The reality is, any course in the mountains is considered a “mountain course” by definition. However, there’s a distinction between mountain courses and courses constructed at elevation.

A mountain course built on the side of a hill can be a nightmare for both designer and player. A mountain course might ask a player to accommodate the mountain slope by hitting a drive into the left rough in order to get the ball on the right side of the fairway. A mountain course typically has dramatic drop-offs on one, or sometimes both sides of the fairway, and shots hit over these edges are irretrievable. A mountain course will inevitably have one or more holes playing uphill, offering another design and playing challenge.

A mountain course that’s actually a course built at elevation, however, is a different animal. Steamboat sits at 6,732 feet, but the Sheraton Steamboat Resort and much of the town lie in a mountain meadow at the foot of peaks pushing their way into the blue Colorado sky. But the peaks rise only for a few more hundred feet - you’re already in the mountains, where the bear, the moose, the elk and other wildlife roam — often on the golf course. And for golfers, the best news is, you won’t feel like a mountain goat playing the course.

Within this meadow setting, Jones II used the lay of the land, its natural surroundings, and Fish Creek to put down a 6,920-yard course (back, or Championship tee) that proves to be a comprehensive test. There will be no driving off a mountainside here; there's plenty of land available to hit your ball off-line. But there's also plenty of trees, rough, and old Fish Creek, to help inflate the inaccurate golfer's score.

"We have a lot of members that love to bring their head pros up here, because they know you can shoot 90 in a hurry if you're not careful," says General Manager Brian Thorne. "If you're going to play good golf from the back tees, you've got to hit to a spot...you can't just close your eyes and hit it. You have to place your ball all over the course. There's not a lot of leeway left-to-right to the rough, a hazard, or trees."

Golfers wind their way through alpine forests, pine-covered granite canyons, and scattered exposed areas, all the while catching glimpses of the ski slopes that will lure them back in due season. Par 5s spill from tee boxes, par 4s promote a sense of communion with the glorious setting, and par 3s keep players attention with smartly-placed bunkers, downhill yardages to consider, and the occasional lurking pond.

Fish Creek imposes itself on players as the round progresses. Thorne said the creek "first becomes a problem" at the 564-yard par 5 No. 10, which finishes with the course's signature defense, a tiny green with tricky breaks. Then there's the 166-yard par-3 No. 14, and the 378-yard par-4 No. 15, where the rocky creek cuts diagonally in front of both greens.

It's a full-blown fix for golfers who enjoy the air temperature and setting of a mountain course, but aren't fond of the lost balls, intense requirements, and quirks of playing on the side of a mountain.

Red Sky Golf on Radar Alert

Golf academy's new TrackMan launch monitor helps improve golf scores during stellar 2014 season

If it's good enough for the pros, then it's destined to be an option for Red Sky Golf Club members. When Director of Golf Jeff Hanson decided to enhance his golfers' experience this season, he zeroed in on purchasing the industry's best launch monitor to become the cornerstone of Red Sky's onsite golf academy. After extensive research, he decided on a TrackMan system (valued at more than $25,000), installed in March. The result has been nothing but praise around the Vail Valley—and some lower golf scores from golfers who have utilized it in lessons. “All the PGA Tour players use it,” Hanson says. “People are lining up to get on it.”

Red Sky's TrackMan is one of only three in the state and the only one at a mountain course. To track ball flight from launch to landing, it uses a “Doppler radar principal” also used in radar technology that monitors missiles and severe weather. “It tracks 19 different variables, and allows an instructor to analyze the ball in flight and provide valuable feedback we never could before,” says Hanson. “It's a value to our membership and resort guests, and gives them something new to see.” He cites club-head speed, attack angle and club path as important factors that are pinpointed, rather than surrounded by estimations. “Now we have a number in front of us.” Hanson tried it out with his own golf swing. “I found out that my club path wasn't what I thought it was, and my face angle was different than I thought.”

In order to complement the high-tech system, Hanson says that Red Sky's pros have been trained with TrackMan courses and representatives. “I wanted to improve the academy and wanted the experience for members to be better—they come out of lessons feeling like we've taken out the guesswork.” Golf club fittings are enhanced as well. “Numbers don't lie. Spin rate and launch angle and club path influence distance. TrackMan is great for lessons, but also optimizes the ability to adjust club shafts and heads, and hit farther.”

Veteran PGA Tour player Larry Rinker is director of instruction and has managed the Red Sky Golf Academy for five years. Open year-round, the academy embraces a philosophy of improving overall body mechanics along with golf swings, and incorporates its onsite fitness center equipment alongside golf lessons. At the indoor venue, golfers hit into a net and ball flight is precisely monitored by TrackMan for distance, carries and rolls—impossible to evaluate during previous sessions where only a video camera recorded hits into snow.

What else is new at Red Sky? Hanson says, “It's been a great summer. The weather has been perfect and both courses are in great shape. This year we hired a full-time activities director in charge of non-golf activity: flyfishing expeditions, hikes and biking across Vail Valley. Now members have opportunities to do something beyond golf and also meet people.” He says youngsters enjoyed a four-day junior “adventure camp,” with golf in the morning and a different activity each afternoon, while adults took yoga classes, and attended social events such as wine tastings.

Award-winning Red Sky is scenically located on a mountainside just west of Vail. Two championship 18-hole courses—one created by Greg Norman, the second designed by Tom Fazio—are a distinct study in contrasts offering a variety of playing experiences. “With 250 members plus guests of Vail Resorts properties, Red Sky is a unique model,” says Hanson. Courses switch daily between members-only and guest-resort designations, but members always have the flexibility to play either one. “We have a young, vibrant, active membership from all over the country and with events outside of golf—now we have ski days—we are more than just a six-month, summertime designation.” For more information, go to: RedSkyGolfClub.com, or call 866.873.3759.

Referencing Your Club's Swing Paths

Being aware of the correct swing paths will help you hit a better shot

One of the things I love most about teaching golf is sharing with my students how to accurately reference the paths of the golf swing. While most higher-handicap golfers play what I call “see-hit-and-hope golf,” it is my experience that is not the case with players on the professional tours. Rather, these players move their clubs in reference to very specific paths throughout the swing.

Set-up Path

When setting up to the golf ball, I have a specific path that goes from the target in the distance back through my golf ball. This is called the target line and this line is the path on which I want my golf ball to travel. As I set up to the ball, I am standing parallel to the target line, establishing what I call the toe line; it's this line to which my body and toes are aligned.

The key to a good set-up is to tilt from the hips so the arms and hands hang directly on top of the toe line. This is important because I want my hands and golf club to move directly on top of the toe line in the takeaway in order for the golf club to be on the correct path for a straight ball flight. These lines are very important references in the golf swing. To help a player establish these lines, I often use sticks or clubs on the ground to serve as reference points.

Takeaway Path

In the backswing, I want to power the takeaway through my shoulder rotation in order for my arms and hands to move directly back on top of the toe line. There is a point in the swing when the shaft is level to the ground. If the club is on the correct path, the shaft should be directly on top of the toe line. Swing flaws can easily occur at this point if the shaft is either too far inside or outside the toe line.

Transition Path

The key to transitioning from backswing to forward swing is “setting” the golf club correctly. In order to keep the golf club on path, I need to execute the proper hinging of my wrist. The goal of this hinging motion is to precisely angle the shaft of the golf club so that the butt of the club points to the target line/golf ball in transition, depending on the length of my swing. The great Jack Nicklaus described this hinging motion as “feeling the weight of the club cocking the wrist for me,” so he could angle or “set” the golf club to the target line in transition

Forward Swing Path

The setting of the golf club now serves the purpose of establishing what I call the forward swing plane or path. If you were to draw a line through the shaft in transition, ideally you would want that line to point to the golf ball/target line. This line is now the path of my hands in the forward swing. As I rotate my body in the forward motion of the golf swing, my hands will be on this same path as they move precisely in reference to the swing plane. You can see this in the finish of my swing.

By referencing these swing paths throughout the golf swing, you will have greater clarity and an increased ability to produce the type of swing that will help you execute your best shots

Meet the New By Aaron Atwood
BMW i8

In a word, wow!

Hello World! BMW has broken the mold and challenged all assumptions regarding what a sports car can and ought to be. The BMW i8 takes on all comers in a hybrid cage match made for a Vegas promoter. It's sexy, powerful and loaded, and at 94 mpg, you'll feel great about driving it every day.

You'll look great driving it as well, turning heads because it's impossible not to stare at this inspiring design. The Lamborghini-like scissor doors only add to the feeling that you're driving something very special. You won't be mistaken for driving a 5-series Bimmer in the i8. This is new. In fact, BMW put design controls into the hands of an entirely new division in its Bavarian headquarters. Nothing about the i8 says, "I'm a cousin of the M Drive."

The values of the I Division seem to rank sustainability heavily along with innovation. The feeling you get when you lift the cover on the i8 is inspiring. Aluminum chassis, bolts (instead of steel) and wiring (instead of copper) help make the i8 a lightweight in the luxury sports-car division. At a curb weight of just over 3,200 lbs., it's comparable to most coupes. Granted, the backseat of the i8 is probably better for storing your sunglasses than your kids, but the wheelbase on the i8 is long like a sedan. BMW took pains to use special glass in the rear window and ductwork in the heating/cooling system to save weight, ideas that may set the trend for decades to come. Not to mention that sitting in the i8 may send you immediately into the future of car making. In summary, the Tesla Model S is probably the closest competition and it weighs in at 4,600 pounds. Lucky for BMW that these two aren't in a boxing match.

Don't misunderstand; there are plenty of features that make the i8 a BMW to the core. The grill features the kidney shape that has defined BMW forever. BMW blue trim rings several of the interior and exterior features, and the all-familiar chevron on the hood ensures it's branded as one of the best in the business. But the body on this beauty was not modeled after her daddy's BMW.

One look at the hood with its venting, lines and mean-looking curves will have you clamoring. This is the best-looking BMW ever. It has more athleticism than the M6 and enough class to put Mercedes and Jaguar on their heels. The bodylines are dynamic. The doors are creased lengthwise and scooped at the handles. You may want to do some stretching before entering or exiting the wing-style doors, but even just putting those doors up and gazing at the i8 is too much fun to miss. Try it out in downtown Denver and you'll instantly have 50 new best friends—this car is a people magnet.

For all the technology that goes into making the i8, you won't find yourself fumbling to make it work. It works like a car, not nuclear power plant. That said there is a load of work going on inside to make the three-cylinder gas engine marry well with the electric motor. The electric motor works only the front wheels; the gas engine powers a six-speed transmission on the rear wheels, providing instant all-wheel drive.

Now, let's talk numbers. The 1.5-liter, three-cylinder gas engine is a direct-injected, turbo-charged powerhouse. It's the Sugar Ray Leonard of the motor world. With 231 horsepower and 236 pound-feet of torque, this little engine absolutely can and does pack a punch. The left hook that is the combustion engine is followed by a right-hand electric motor. The electric motor produces 129 horsepower (96 kilowatts) and 184 pound-feet of torque. Together, the two generate 362 horsepower and 420 pound-feet of torque.

This output gets a 0-60 time of 4.2 seconds according to BMW. A quarter-mile is covered in just over 12 seconds.

These are true sports-car numbers. And with a limited top speed of 155 mph, there's plenty of performance for everyone. The AWD makes driving the i8 fun—even the engine note is awesome. Though BMW had to generate the engine noise by pumping it through the speakers, I challenge you to point out any hint of artificiality.

The i8 is a contender and will raise your heart rate and your status on any street in the USA.

The caddy who holds your umbrella to protect you from the sun or fetches your favorite club will also gladly massage your back and find a cold towel for your neck. And she'll do that while also providing accurate yardage and reading your putts. The cost for this level of service is a mere 400 baht—approximately $13!

shower and change into clean clothes in the clubhouse. Most facilities are expansive, providing more than 30 private showers and large, beautifully appointed locker rooms.

And then there are the courses themselves. Siam Country Club in Pattaya has three championship golf courses. The qualifying course for the International BMW Championships is one of the newer layouts and, as one would expect, it offers exceptional golf. Siam Country Club is the first privately owned golf course in Thailand and the first facility in the country to host an LPGA event. Its stunning contemporary clubhouse has everything.

Owner Prasertchai Phornprapha, affectionately known as Khun Chai, is economy. The value of products and a high-quality lifestyle remain inexpensive there by comparison with much of the rest of the world. Accommodations at even the best hotels are affordable, and most come with the luxuries any world traveler wants and expects. The mantra we found in Thailand was “live our lifestyle.”

Aside from rich cultural offerings, Thailand is one of the few places in the world that you can visit and enjoy a lifestyle that would come at a much higher price almost anywhere else today. Food, accommodations and, yes, golf are still inexpensive in Thailand, as are a multitude of luxury services including famed Thai massages. For many tourists, a primary benefit of visiting this incredible place is the lifestyle that can be enjoyed at a relatively modest price.

For golfers, the benefits are even greater. This gorgeous, exotic country is home to some of the most beautiful golf courses in the world. According to the Thai Golf Association, there are more than 200 golf courses just from Phuket to Pattaya and on to Bangkok.

Most golf courses also offer a high level of amenities. In Thailand, for example, after finishing a round of golf, it's normal to proud of his club and of the lifestyle that his country offers. “Here it's all about how we live,” he says. “Where else can you live the lifestyle we enjoy? Manicures, pedicures and massages are just a few of the luxuries easily afforded here. Thailand offers a lifestyle found nowhere else.”

Another first-class facility is Lotus Valley Golf Resort. This Gary Player design is about an hour’s drive from Bangkok. Opened in 1998, Lotus Valley is a 7015-yard championship layout with a modern clubhouse complete with Japanese baths. Greens fees vary from about $50 to $120 per round, depending on the time of day, season, etc.

The Kingdom of Thailand offers championship golf with water features, fruit trees and much of what you would find anywhere in the world. One golf course, however, also includes monkeys. Seriously, monkeys everywhere. Bamgra Golf Club north of Pattaya was built in 1958 and updated in 1988. This mature facility is one of the prettiest courses in the area, and it can be played for approximately $35-$90, depending on time and day of play.

In Chiang Mai, in northwestern Thailand, Chiang Mai Highlands Golf and Spa Resort offers every conceivable amenity. This family facility provides for spectacular mountain golf at approximately $100 a round for visitors. Opened in 2005, the Lee Schmidt and Brian Curley design plays to a par 72 at 7003 yards.

Another excellent hotel in the area is Siripanna Villa Resort & Spa, with just 74 spacious, luxurious rooms and villas. Gorgeous teak furniture throughout and an abundance of luxury touches make this a property not to be missed.

Chiang Mai is famous for the Maesa Elephant Camp, a conservation center with some 70 elephants on property that have been trained to entertain thousands of visitors from around the world. Most impressive are the Guinness World Record and Ripley’s Believe it or Not noted painting elephants. These highly-trained-pachyderms-turned-highly-paid-artists commanded $50,000 for a painting titled “Lanna,” purchased by a Thai-born U.S. businessman. Daily painted canvasses sell for as much as $100. The Elephant Camp is a must see when visiting Chiang Mai.

Also there is Wat Phra That Doi Suthep, a Theravada Buddhist temple and the holiest shrine in northern Thailand. Built in 1386, the temple is on a mountaintop at 3,542 ft. and accessible by 300 steps or via a lift. The gold-plated temple is home to many shrines, bells, golden umbrellas and Buddha statues. Thailand has many temples in every village and city as well as in homes and businesses. The Thai people are extremely religious and these temples are fascinating places to visit.

The names Doubletree, Hilton and Best Western in the United States are typically associated with nice, modern accommodations. In Thailand, however, these brands are high-end luxury properties. The new Hilton Pattaya is spectacular, as is the Hilton Sukhumvit Bangkok, where gorgeous marble baths complement expansive guest rooms. Restaurants at these hotels are on par with top restaurants in New York or Las Vegas.

Thailand simply has too many incredible places to list in one article, but one thing is certain: there is no more amazing place to vacation, whether the focus is golf, tennis or exotic culture, and the value for dollars spent is phenomenal.

Vail's Gastronomic Delights

The Colorado Rockies are known for spectacular skiing and golf, and of course, beauty. The summertime also provides for amazing weather for great hiking, biking, fishing, camping, boating and much more. Colorado's world-class mountain resort towns are also known for movie stars, nightlife and now, more than ever, world-class dining.

Over the years, Vail has attracted some of America's and Europe's finest chefs. With sophisticated palette's Vail's restaurants offer visitors and residents world-class dining experiences.

One of Vail's top restaurants for more than 40 years is the Left Bank. Featuring authentic French cuisine, this newly renovated gourmet spot in the heart of Vail Village has an extensive wine list, incredible ambience overlooking the beautiful Gore Creek as it flows through town and you must see the new contemporary design. The sumptuous dining experiences feature such trademark appetizers as Foie Gras, Escargots, Coquilles St. Jacque and more! Traditional entrées include; Steak au Poivre, Rack of Lamb, Bouillabaisse and many other incredible creations by Chef Jean-Michael Chelain. For reservations, call 970-476-3696 after 1pm.

A favorite European style dining experience, Pepi's Bar & Restaurant is housed in the Hotel Gasthof Gramshammer, a landmark Vail property with an Austrian restaurant featuring wild game such as Venison, Quail, Wild Boar, Canadian Caribou and Elk Loin to name a few! Other Bavarian delights attract any "foodie" such as Weiner Schnitzel, fresh Dover Sole and a Pistachio Crusted Chilean Seabass, just a sampling of their amazing menu. Established in 1964, owners Pepi and Sheika Gramshammer's, authentic European Inn and restaurant are landmarks in the Vail Valley. The Inn provides 38 rooms, which include six suites and a penthouse all of which come with a complimentary continental breakfast. For hotel reservations call 800-610-7374. For restaurant reservations call 970-476-4671.

If you are looking for a steakhouse, one of the newer establishments in the Vail area is Elway's, yes named after two-time Denver Bronco Superbowl champion quarterback, John Elway. The Vail locale is one of four Elway's restaurants with locations in Cherry Creek, downtown Denver inside the Ritz Carlton Denver, the

The Fall and Rise of the Tennis Bracelet

It fell off during a tournament and launched a global fashion staple

In 2002 Harry Winston created a custom tennis bracelet for Serena Williams to wear on and off the court during the U.S. Open. It was the most notable accessory complementing her famously skintight black Lycra one-piece outfit, a startling head-turner on Arthur Ashe court at that time. A $29,000 version of the bracelet was later available in Harry Winston stores.

Before Serena, other players sported tennis bracelets, including Steffi Graf. But it was Chris Evert who made sports and jewelry history in 1987 when she halted her U.S. Open tennis match to find the diamond bracelet that had slipped off her wrist. In that unexpected moment, Evert and her elegant bracelet with its single row of diamonds launched a fashion phenomenon. The term “tennis bracelet” became known across the globe.

It was a new name, but the classic design had been around for years, known as an eternity or in-line diamond bracelet. It is sometimes still listed as such in fine jewelry collections and catalogs. There’s no question that the bracelet’s popularity rose as athletes embraced the notion of wearing a light diamond bracelet during matches, bringing a heightened sense of fashion to competitive play.

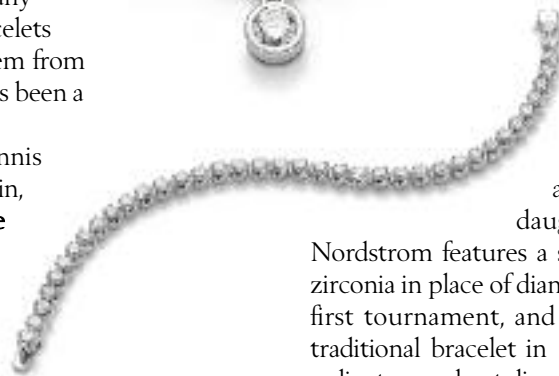

After Evert’s Grand Slam mishap, many jewelers wisely started fitting tennis bracelets with a small safety chain to prevent them from falling even if the clasp failed, and that has been a benefit for active women everywhere.

More than 25 years later, the tennis bracelet’s popularity continues. Riki Stein, vice president of Leeds and Son Fine Jewelers in Palm Desert, Calif., says, “The tennis bracelet has become a classic wardrobe item, a must-have for its versatility—from the tennis court to the golf course to a desert gala.”

The bracelet is noted for its classically simple design of set diamonds that encircle the wrist, but variations abound. Leeds and Son, for example, carries traditional diamond-only bracelets, as well as those that incorporate other gemstones such as sapphires and emeralds for a pop of color. “There are also different ways to set a tennis bracelet, with shared prongs or the use of three or four prongs,” Stein says. “Or they are set in yellow or white gold or in platinum. It is very versatile.”

Whether classic or contemporary, sterling or platinum, there’s a tennis bracelet for every woman. Pricing typically varies according to the metal used and the total carat weight (ctw) of the diamonds.

By any name or variation, the tennis bracelet remains the single piece of jewelry most closely connected to sport fashion. Wearing one creates a sense of enduring style and elegance, on or off the court or course.

Roberto Coin Jewelers, which has a boutique on El Paseo in Palm Desert, Calif., brings contemporary styling to the bracelet, adding appeal for today’s wearer. The Cento Amuleto Bracelet, for example, features alternating links of white gold and pave diamonds along with round-cut, bezel-set Cento diamond drops. With 8.75 ctw, this bracelet is priced at $120,500; it is also available in yellow gold. Also in the Cento collection is the 18-karat white gold Cento Tulip Tennis Bracelet, 3.25 ctw, priced at $14,500, and the 18-karat white gold Cento C-Profile Line Bracelet, 6.50 ctw, at $34,000. robertocoin.com

Blue Nile, founded in 1999 and now one of the largest online retailers of certified diamonds and fine jewelry, has a huge selection of tennis bracelets starting at about $2,600 and reaching $41,000. The $2,600 bracelet available at the time of this writing, for example, is 18-karat white gold with 1 ctw. A tennis bracelet priced at $28,070 is platinum with 10 ctw. The Cushion Diamond Bracelet with its single row of 41 spectacular cushion diamonds (12.46 ctw) sells for $41,000. And for women who prefer yellow gold, there is an 18-karat bracelet with 3 ctw priced at $4,600, and another with 7 ctw priced at $10,500. bluenile.com

Nordstrom also offers the popular bracelet in several variations on its website, and some pieces are available in Nordstrom store locations as well. For parents who have a young daughter starting out in tennis or golf, Nordstrom features a sterling silver tennis bracelet with cubic zirconia in place of diamonds. It could be the perfect gift before a first tournament, and it’s well priced at $128. There’s also a traditional bracelet in 18-karat white gold with a single line of radiant, round-cut diamonds (1.05 ctw) listed at $3,995, as well as the Riviera Diamond Line Bracelet by Kwiat in 18-karat white gold with 2 ctw for $5,000. shopnordstrom.com

Bloomingdale’s also has a selection of tennis bracelets, ranging in price from $7,000 to $28,000, some of which are also available in Bloomingdale’s stores. Bracelets in 14-karat yellow gold start at $7,000 for 2.50 ctw, and top out at $28,000 for a total weight of 10 ct. Bracelets with 3.50 and 8.0 ctw are priced at $9,000 and $21,800, respectively. The same bracelets are available in 14-karat white gold, and there’s also a white-gold bracelet with 6.0 ctw, which retails for $15,000. bloomingdales.com

The Latest News and Stats on Colorado PGA Players

By Aaron Atwood

With the FedEx Cup Playoffs coming to Colorado this fall (the BMW Championship at Cherry Hills Country Club), every PGA Tour player with Colorado ties wants to see himself win on home soil. Only the top 70 players after the first two playoffs tournaments will make it to the no-cut BMW Championship.

Kevin Stadler was 25th in the FedEx Cup standings after his near miss at the Alstom Open de France. Stadler missed a short putt to finish second. In June, he finished 63rd at the U.S. Open. He's earned more than $2 million in prize money this season.

Andrew Svoboda is taking advantage of his first fully exempt year on the PGA Tour. His runner-up at the Zurich Classic paired with his 63rd at the Greenbrier Classic makes him nearly a sure lock to keep his card in 2015. He sits at 73rd in the FedEx Cup standings.

Martin Laird is 148th in the FedEx Cup standings. His February 19th-place showing at the Waste Management Phoenix Open was a season best. With over $300,000 in earnings, he's No. 154 on the money list heading into the Scottish Open.

David Duval continues his comeback efforts in 2014 with mixed results. His 25th-place finish at the Zurich Classic was followed by a missed cut at the Travelers Championship. Duval is 194th in the FedEx Cup standings and 197th on the money list. He's made three cuts this season.

In Champions Tour news, one-time Castle Rock resident Esteban Toledo finished sixth at the Encompass Championship in June. He sits 25th on the 2014 money list with $322,060

Former DU ladies golfer Sue Kim has made five-of-13 cuts on the LPGA Tour and has pocketed over $33,000 in prize money.
